Bec Hill in: If You Can Read This, My Cape Fell Off

This is a show for anyone who has ever worn their undies on the outside, and is the first solo show for this fast rising, young comedian.

Ever since she can remember, Bec Hill has wanted to be a Superhero. But when your only superpower is making awesome cheese on toast – no, seriously, it's really awesome – do you stand much of a chance?

Hers is a strange world, where ninjas chase her to work, stick figures come to life and Batman has a speech impediment. Using a mix of stand-up, video and 'paper-puppetry' she searches for answers. How do you become a Superhero? Can anyone be a Superhero? Should her costume be the colour of the cheese, or the toast?

Bec Hill has come a long way since her first gig in the 2005 Raw Comedy Competition at the age of 18. Having supported Justin Hamilton in two festival seasons, performed at the Edinburgh Fringe, been a national finalist in the 2006 Raw Comedy Competition, Bec is ready to tackle the next big challenge – utility belt, or whip?

Come and see why this upcoming comedian's 2007 Melbourne Comedy Festival show came second in the Groggy Squirrel Reader's Choice Award (just after Daniel Kitson).

"...she has talent to burn and is a star in the making." The Age

"Bec won over the crowd with her seemingly limitless supplies of energy and joy" The Pun
