Dear Lou, I thought we agreed not to talk about this....

'I tried to write a boy a letter once. This is a story about that.'

It is estimated that 50 billion emails are sent everyday – yet how many do we keep or re-read? Writer and comedian Lou Sanz cajoles and reminds us to re-engage with the art of letter writing. Mind you, her mother did always say, “Don’t write anything down Lou; there’s a chance it might end up meaning something.”

This year Lou tried to write the definitive reply to the letter a boy left in her flat 18 months earlier. Lou decided to tell the story of trying to write that letter. To do this, she delves into letters she has received or attempted to write over the years, as well as seeking inspiration from some rather famous letters of reply.

This is a show about writing that one letter you’ve always wanted to write.

Lou Sanz is an exciting new voice in the comedy stand-up scene and an old hand at writing. Lou has a Masters in screenwriting, a popular blog (The Problematic World of Lou www.lousanz.com) two feature film scripts in development and has performed alongside some of Comedy’s biggest stars including Judith Lucy, Adam Hills and Mark Watson.
