A Preamble

A Preamble is an astounding tour de force performance of devastating comic genius... too much? I mean, one wants to sell one's self, but one doesn't want to raise the bar too high.

Renowned MC of lascivious and irreverent comedy group The Caravan of Love, Eva Johansen has stepped out on her own after a critically-acclaimed and very wet season in Edinburgh.

This solo performance is a ballad to the hopeless, an homage to procrastinators, a celebration of daydreamers everywhere and something else, la-de-da, how awesome is Beyoncé?

The audience is effortlessly integrated into this show, becoming band members, film actors and streamer-throwing party-goers, but don't be scared because Eva is very nice and gentle. If you don't want to throw streamers or be in her band she won't force you.

Eva traverses a myriad of comic influences such as vaudeville, silent film, mime, slapstick and cabaret. The resulting work is a delightfully meandering narrative as touching, funny, messy and chaotic as life itself*.

"An original balance of clown and ingénue, she effortlessly switches from slapstick routine to heart-breaking, room-silencing song" – aussietheatre.com
